- Capitalism by its very nature required the exploitation and de-humanization of the working class majority.
- Human progress therefore required that the working class organize, overthrow the capitalists and their state, and establish a socialist form of government with public control over all productive property.
- this would create "real" democracy—social democracy based upon the ideal of social rights and social equality.
- under socialism and the "dictatorship of the working class," social classes and class conflict would eventually disappear
- as a result, government (considered as a weapon of class rule)
